

NATIONAL LAW CENTER ON HOMELESSNESS & POVERTY

The National Law Center on Homelessness & Poverty: Lawyers Working to End Homelessness

Each year, more than 3 million people experience homelessness, including 1.3 million children. Beginning in the early 1980s the number of homeless Americans grew dramatically. The face of homelessness became diverse. It began to include mothers and fathers, sons and daughters, and racial and ethnic minorities. One-third of the homeless population is made up of families.

The mission of the National Law Center on Homelessness & Poverty is to serve as the legal arm of the nationwide movement to prevent and end homelessness. The Law Center is the only national legal advocacy organization dedicated to preventing and ending homelessness. Our attorneys go into courtrooms and the halls of our legislatures to protect the needs of society's most vulnerable members.

Through impact litigation, policy advocacy, and public education, we address the root causes of homelessness at the local, state, and national levels.

Changing Laws & Changing Lives

The Law Center makes a crucial difference in the lives of millions of homeless men, women, and children across the country. Our programs:

- Ensure that homeless children are able to go to school
- Prevent domestic violence survivors from becoming homeless
- Help impoverished families when they are made homeless by natural disasters
- Hold the U.S. government accountable until the human right to housing is a reality for all
- Protect homeless people from discrimination based on their status
- Create homes and communities for homeless people from unused government property

Key Accomplishments

Major accomplishments include:

- Increasing federal resources to combat and end homelessness. The Law Center was instrumental in the May 2009 passage of the Homeless Emergency Assistance and Rapid Transition to Housing (HEARTH) Act, which increased federal resources to prevent homelessness and to house those already homeless, and required that the federal government develop a plan to end homelessness.
- Protecting tenants from wrongful eviction. The Law Center was instrumental in the passage of 2009's Protecting Tenants at Foreclosure Act, which provided tenants of foreclosure properties with unprecedented federal protections, including the right to 90-days notice prior to eviction or, in many cases, the right to stay in their home until the end of their lease.
- Protecting homeless people from hate crimes. The Law Center successfully advocated for laws in D.C. and Maryland that add homeless people as a protected class to their hate crime statutes.
- Protecting homeless persons' civil rights. The Law Center successfully advocated against anti-camping laws in Puyallup, WA, where homeless persons were harassed and arrested for sleeping in public. As a result of the Law Center's efforts, the Puyallup City Council declared a Homeless Awareness Day and is considering legislation to establish tent cities on Church property.
- Protecting the right of children to a good, stable education. In a suburb of Pittsburgh, a homeless family sought shelter at area churches over the course of several months. The children's school informed them that because several of the churches were outside the district, the children were not residents, and therefore ineligible to attend school. The Law Center fought successfully to enroll the youth, and is defending the case on appeal.

- Hosting a UN Rapporteur's tour of impoverished American cities. The Law Center helped to plan a nationwide fact-finding mission for the UN Special Rapporteur on Adequate Housing, Rachel Rolnik, who met with poor and homeless persons and government officials in New Orleans, Los Angeles, and Washington, D.C. and other cities to assess the status of American homelessness. She concluded her trip by sharing her preliminary findings at the Law Center's 2009 National Forum on Housing as a Human Right.
- Leveraging over $1,955,325 in pro bono support from law firms in 2008. The Law Center partners with law firms directly and indirectly to enforce the rights and improve the lives of homeless and low-income Americans.
